

This appears to be anotherbureacratic attempt to negatively control our ability to do business. We use the fax to communicate primarily with our association members for the purpose of sending collection status reports, customer requested credit reports, and assorted transmissions in the normal course of business. On occassion, we can offer info on affinity programsthat may provide a benefital product or service. This contact is with our established customer base; however, I can imagine that before long even this method of communicating for these specific needs will be threatened with total abolition. I'd much rather see your efforts directed toward e-mail spammers than fax stuff. FYI-Yesterday I had seven "valid" e-mails out of 121-a major problem not like unsolicited faxes!!
